IS INVESTMENT BEHAVIOR IN OUR GENES?

Mondays, August 9 and 23

A new study of twins suggests that genetics may account for up to 45% of investors' investment decisions—more than any other factor. But if investment behavior is largely inherited, can investors overcome their bad habits? On August 9, Reporter Dan Grech reports on what brain researchers have found.

Then on August 23, a Behavioral

Finance expert will comment on the implications for investor decision-making.

When it is fully implemented in 2014, the new Health Care Reform Law is supposed to make health insurance available to all Americans. In the meantime, many people with pre-existing medical conditions are still having a hard time finding affordable health insurance. Reporter Benno Schmidt profiles an ice cream truck operator in Miami's Little Havana neighborhood who faces that dilemma.
